What is the maximum SNAP monthly benefit?

SNAP benefit amounts are based on earned and unearned income, including Social Security cash benefits and child support, as well as household size and expenses, e.g., medical, childcare and utilities. There are several deductions, such as the homeless and standard deductions, that can be applied to the SNAP calculation to determine monthly benefits. The following chart shows the maximum monthly SNAP allotment based on household size:

Household Size	Max SNAP Allotment
1	$291
2	$535
3	$766

Will work impact my SNAP benefits?

Yes. The SNAP benefit amount will be subject to a reduction since total household income is counted in the SNAP calculation.

Do I have to report my work income?

Yes. You must report any income changes without delay to DTA to avoid overpayments, which must be paid back to the state. Failure to report work activity within 30 days of the date you started work could result in suspension of benefits for 6 months.

How can I verify my SNAP benefits?

Contact your local DTA office or download the free DTA Connect mobile app: For Android or For iPhone. Once subscribed to the mobile app, log in using your Social Security Number and date of birth to access information about your SNAP benefits.
